

Funders Pledge

We trustees and leadership of this funding body, pledge to do no harm. We recognise that funders are not neutral. The conditions we attach to our grants, the language we require in applications, the outcomes we measure, and the organisations we choose to fund all shape what is possible and what is not. We have power, and power that is not examined becomes part of the problem.

We will not fund programmes that require organisations to participate in or comply with hostile environment policies as a condition of delivery. We will not ask grantees to collect immigration status data that is not essential to their work. We will not design funding frameworks that force organisations to sort people into deserving and undeserving, documented and undocumented, eligible and ineligible, when the work they do is about human dignity and human rights.

We will not penalise organisations for speaking publicly against the hostile environment. We will not withdraw funding because a grantee has taken a political position on migration policy. Defending human rights is not a political risk. It is the purpose of the work we fund.

We will actively fund migrant-led organisations, grassroots groups, and community organisers, not as a diversity initiative but because they are closest to the problem and most effective at solving it. We will trust them with unrestricted funding. We will not require them to prove their legitimacy through our frameworks.

We will review our grant conditions, reporting requirements, and due diligence processes to ensure that nothing we ask of our grantees makes the hostile environment easier to enforce or harder to resist. Where we find that our systems have created barriers for the most affected communities, we will change them.

Funders Pledge

We will use our convening power to bring other funders into this commitment. We will not treat this pledge as a competitive advantage. We will treat it as a baseline.

We make this pledge publicly because accountability begins with transparency.

We invite our grantees, our peers, and the communities we exist to serve to hold us to it.
