

Environmental Policy 05/2025

In our company, environmental protection is an important part of our corporate policy. We are aware that our activities impact the environment. Therefore, it is our duty to minimize this impact as much as possible within the framework of economic and technical possibilities and through well-thought-out processes. Our responsibility in dealing with the environment and resources requires us to identify and evaluate our significant environmental aspects, as well as to fulfill the established environmental goals and review them based on measurable criteria.

From our shared responsibility towards people and the environment, we have set ourselves the goal of balancing profitable production and environmental protection by improving environmental performance and avoiding or reducing environmental burdens, where this is technically and organizationally possible and economically feasible. It is a matter of course for us to comply with legal and regulatory requirements, other environmental interests, and the environmental standards we set for ourselves, and to exceed them where possible.

All employees are integrated into our management system and have the right and duty to work towards eliminating conditions that cause unnecessary environmental burdens. Through information and training, we promote environmentally conscious behavior among our employees both within and outside the company.

Continuous improvement of our environmental performance is, for us, a medium- and long-term prerequisite for effectively reducing costs and an important contribution to environmental conservation.

A disturbance-free organization, advanced management methods, and the state of environmental technology provide the necessary framework for this.

Our environmental aspects are:

- Use of fossil fuels
- Hazardous substance management
- Plant operation
- Material transformation
- Raw material consumption
- Water usage
- Wastewater generation
- Waste management
