OPTIONAL ANSWERS

Eventually, the train pulled out of the station. I leaned out of the carriage window and began to wave. Jan was running along the platform. She was smiling but I knew there were tears in her eyes. I waved until she was only a blob in the distance. I knew I might never see her again but I wouldn't think of that now. A whole new world was opening up before me and there was no going back. I had come too far.
