PROFILE

Arif Hyder Ali, FCI Arb, is an independent international arbitrator based in London and Washington, D.C., sitting as presiding, sole, and party-appointed arbitrator in international commercial, construction, investor-State, and State-State disputes.

His practice is grounded in more than 35 years in international arbitration as lead counsel and arbitrator in over 100 complex commercial and treaty cases, and as adviser to sovereign governments and corporate clients on matters of public international law, including treaty obligations, State responsibility, human rights, sanctions, law reform, and maritime and territorial boundaries. Proceedings in which he has acted range in value from tens of millions to multiple billions of dollars. He works across common-law and civil-law systems, public international law, European Union law, and Shari'a commercial law.

His primary specialization is in the energy and extractives industries — oil and gas, LNG, power generation and transmission, energy-sector infrastructure, and mining and minerals. He has also handled significant engagements in construction, technology and intellectual property, telecommunications, hospitality, banking and finance, and life sciences, often in settings where linguistic, cultural, or geopolitical factors have shaped how the dispute arose and how it is understood and managed.

Arif has arbitrated and served as counsel under all major arbitral regimes, including the AAA/ICDR, ICC, ICSID, LCIA, SIAC, DIAC, SCC, WIPO, and UNCITRAL rules. His approach combines active case management with respect for party autonomy, emphasizing early identification of determinative issues, disciplined handling of documentary, testimonial, and expert evidence, the use of decision trees to focus deliberations, and commits to issuing awards promptly after final submissions.

Arif's professional background includes senior positions with United Nations Compensation Commission and the WIPO Arbitration and Mediation Centre in Geneva, and private practice with leading global law firms, including as chair of the international arbitration and public international law groups of three AmLaw 100 firms.
