The height in meters above sea level was measured by inputting the geographic coordinates of the locations shown in the YouTube video clips within topographic software.

Fueled by a collective passion for exploration, our team initiated a data-driven design project to quantifiably measure and visually depict the greatness of our wanderlust. This unique journey sought to answer questions about the heights reached, distances covered, cultural encounters, and the ultimate satisfaction attained.

Through meticulously designed infographics and artworks, we transformed raw travel data into a rich tapestry, interweaving individual tales into a comprehensive narrative that not only celebrated the diverse aspects of our wanderlust but also left us with a visually striking legacy, encapsulating the essence of our extraordinary adventures.

the lower, the better?

In a surprising twist within the DJing landscape, our analysis revealed an intriguing correlation: DJ sets performed at lower altitudes demonstrated a notable surge in YouTube viewership. The connection between atmospheric settings during performances and online reception adds a unique dimension to the artistry of DJing, highlighting the impact of physical conditions on the digital realm of musical experience.

Klaus keep up One hour

Within our detailed examination of DJ set dynamics, a captivating pattern came to light: Klaus's performances, especially those around the one-hour mark, consistently outperformed those by other DJs on YouTube, amassing higher views and likes. Klaus's unique style and meticulous precision seemed to resonate exceptionally well within this specific duration, unveiling a nuanced interplay between the DJ's identity, set length, and online engagement metrics. This revelation not only emphasizes Klaus's distinct appeal but also provides nuanced insights into the intricate factors influencing viewer preferences and interactions within the dynamic landscape of YouTube's music content.
