MORE THAN JUST A FILM DIRECTOR DIAMOND BATISTE

Diamond Batiste is a director, writer, producer, and founder of StoryBridge Entertainment with over a decade of experience in telling compelling stories across various genres. A graduate of the MFA Directing program at Chapman University, Diamond has directed several notable short films, including "Always," a drama starring Jerry Maddison Jr. and Tia Shipman that garnered multiple selections at film festivals; "Stand Up," a dramedy featuring a star-studded cast including B. Simone, Karlous Miller, Emmanuel Hudson, Patrick Walker, Kway Rogers, and Damien "Dante" Wayans Jr., which was selected at the Academy-qualifying LA Shorts Festival; and "Don't Hang Up," starring veteran actress Paula J. Parker.

In addition to his work in short films, Diamond created the hit reality show "Titi Do You Love Me?" for the Zeus Network, demonstrating his versatility in both scripted and unscripted content. He has also partnered with Sony and National Lampoon on projects like "Bernie the Dinosaur" and "All I Stole for Christmas," the latter sponsored by Canada Dry. Currently, he is collaborating with Keke Palmer on the documentary "Master of Me (MOM)," which chronicles her life and journey as explored in her upcoming book of the same title.

Diamond's work reflects a commitment to authentic storytelling, dynamic character development, and a passion for bringing diverse narratives to the screen.
