

The Bible : Unchained

SAMPLE

Dathan Pyle

CHAPTER 1

PREFACE

The Bible is the most influential book in human history, yet it is also one of the least understood. Every year, millions of people open its pages with a genuine desire to read it, only to get lost in complex, ancient language, dense legal codes, or unfamiliar historical settings. They lose the thread of the story, get frustrated, and close the book.

This book was written to change that.

The goal here is simple: Every part explained. Zero confusion. This is not a word-for-word translation, nor is it a dry theological textbook. It is the entire timeline of Scripture distilled into one continuous, easy-to-read narrative. Think of this as a clear roadmap—a tool designed to give you a complete understanding of the big picture so that you can pick up a traditional Bible and read it with absolute confidence.

To understand where we are going, we need to look at what the Bible actually is. It is not just a single book; it is a library.

The Framework of Scripture

The Bible is a collection of 66 individual books, written by at least 40 different people over a span of roughly 1,500 years. The authors came from completely different walks of life—including kings, scholars, soldiers, doctors, and simple fishermen. They wrote from different continents and in different languages. Yet, when you look at the big picture, their words fit together like a perfect puzzle, telling one single, grand narrative.

This library is divided into two distinct sections:

- The Old Testament: This makes up the first three-quarters of the Bible. It traces the creation of the world, the early history of humanity, and the specific journey of the nation of Israel.

- The New Testament: This is the final quarter of the Bible. It documents the life of Jesus, the explosion of the early Christian movement, and instructions for how to live out the faith.

Although these are two separate sections, they are entirely dependent on each other. One cannot be complete without the other. At its absolute core, the difference between the Old and New Testaments comes down to one simple reality: the difference between a promise made and a promise kept.

The Old Testament is a 39-book building project of anticipation, filled with promises that a Messiah—a Savior—would come to rescue a broken world. The New Testament is the 27-book historical record of that Savior arriving and fulfilling every single one of those promises.

The 400-Year Frontier

Between the final words of the Old Testament (the book of Malachi, written around 400 BC) and the opening events of the New Testament (the birth of John the Baptist and Jesus around 4 BC), there is a 400-year gap.

In church tradition, this era is often called the “Period of Silence.” It gets this name because, during these four centuries, no inspired Scripture was written, and no active prophets spoke on behalf of God to the people of Israel.

But do not let the word “silence” fool you. Historically, this was a massive, chaotic, and vital era that perfectly set the stage for the New Testament. During these four centuries, the global landscape shifted dramatically. Kingdoms rose and fell, cultures clashed, universal languages were established, and international highways were paved.

As we walk through this book, you will see that God wasn’t inactive during those 400 years of silence. He was moving the pieces of world history into exact alignment. He was preparing the globe so that the moment the New Testament opened, the message of the fulfilled promise could spread across the earth faster and clearer than ever before.

Let's begin where history began. Turn the page, and let's dive into Chapter 1: The Beginning of Everything.

CHAPTER 2

THE OLD TESTAMENT

Every great story needs a foundation. Part 1 takes you through the Old Testament, where a diverse crew of ancient writers maps out the origin of humanity, the choice of a specific family line, and centuries of high-stakes nation-building. Through split oceans, roaring prophets, and broken contracts, this first half of the Bible establishes a crucial truth: humanity is broken, and we desperately need a rescue mission. The stage is officially set.

CHAPTER 3

THE BEGINNING OF EVERYTHING

The Story of Genesis

- Who Wrote It & When: Moses compiled and wrote this account around 1400 BC while leading the nation of Israel through the wilderness after their escape from Egypt.
- The Historical Value: Genesis is the foundational record of human history. It establishes the literal origins of the universe, the beginning of human life, the entrance of moral corruption into the world, and the ethnic origin of the Hebrew people.
- The Promise of Jesus: Immediately after humanity rebels, God delivers the first prophecy of the Bible (Genesis 3:15). He promises that a male descendant of the woman will arrive in human history to completely crush the power of the serpent (evil). This is the first direct promise of the coming Messiah, Jesus.

The Architecture of Creation

In the absolute beginning, there was nothing. There was no matter, no space, no time, and no light. There was only God, existing completely self-sufficiently.

Then, God spoke.

He did not use physical materials, labor over blueprints, or require time to construct the universe. He simply issued a verbal command, and physical reality instantly exploded into existence out of nothing. Over the course of six distinct periods, God systematically organized the chaos. He separated light from darkness, formed the atmosphere, gathered the oceans to expose dry land, and populated the earth with vegetation, the sun, the moon, stars, sea creatures, and land animals.

At every stage of creation, God looked at what He had spoken into existence and declared it “good.” It was structurally perfect, completely functional, and entirely free of flaw or decay.

To complete His work, God did something completely unique from the rest of creation. He created humanity.

The Image and the Test

God formed the first man, Adam, from the dust of the ground, and later formed the first woman, Eve. Unlike the animals, God made humans in His own image. This meant they were given a spiritual nature, rational minds, and a moral conscience, designed to reflect God’s character and rule over the earth as His caretakers.

God placed them in a pristine, abundant garden called Eden. They had total freedom to enjoy everything in paradise with only one strict restriction: They were forbidden to eat the fruit from the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil.

The Quick Explanation: This restriction was a fundamental test of loyalty and trust. The tree itself did not contain magical poison. Rather, it represented a choice: would humanity trust God’s authority to define what was good and bad for them, or would they attempt to claim that authority for themselves?

The Rebellion and the Fallout

The test came to a head when a powerful, manipulative spiritual adversary—appearing in the form of a serpent—approached Eve. He did not force her to disobey; instead, he subtly twisted God’s words and planted a seed of doubt. He convinced her that God was holding out on them, and that if they ate the fruit, their eyes would be opened and they would become just like God, deciding right and wrong for themselves.

Eve believed the deception and ate the fruit. She then gave some to Adam, who was with her, and he ate it as well.

Instantly, the perfect design broke. Spiritual death occurred immediately. For the first time in human history, Adam and Eve experienced shame, guilt, and fear. Realizing they were naked, they tried to sew leaves together to cover themselves, and the moment they heard God walking in the garden, they ran and hid among the trees.

It is a striking picture of human nature: trying to hide from the all-knowing Creator of the universe is as impossible as a toddler covering their own eyes and thinking they are invisible.

When God confronted them, the breakdown of human relationships immediately became visible. Instead of taking ownership, Adam blamed Eve (and subtly blamed God for creating her), and Eve blamed the serpent.

Because of this rebellion, God pronounced a physical curse upon the earth. Hard labor, physical pain, agricultural frustration, and eventual physical death entered human reality. Paradise was lost, and Adam and Eve were exiled from the Garden of Eden to prevent them from living forever in a corrupted state.

The Promise in the Ruins

But God did not abandon humanity to destruction. Right there in the middle of pronouncing judgment, God did something that sets the entire plotline for the remaining 65 books of the Bible.

He looked at the serpent and declared that a bitter warfare would exist between the serpent's followers and mankind. He promised that a specific male descendant would be born of a woman who would suffer a wound to his heel, but in the process, would completely crush the serpent's head.

To demonstrate what it takes to cover human guilt, God provided a vivid object lesson: He rejected their flimsy leaf coverings, harvested the skins of animals—requiring the first shedding of innocent blood in human history—and personally clothed Adam and Eve.

The Generational Spiral

From that single act of rebellion, the human race multiplied, and the moral corruption spread rapidly. Adam and Eve's firstborn son, Cain, murdered his younger brother, Abel, out of pure jealousy. Within a few generations, humanity completely lost its moral compass. Violence, depravity, and cruelty became the global norm.

The situation became so catastrophic that God determined to execute a global reset. He found only one man, Noah, who remained faithful and righteous. God instructed Noah to build a massive, three-deck wooden ship—an Ark—to preserve his family and pairs of every animal group.

God sent a catastrophic global flood that completely wiped out the corrupt civilization, breaking open the fountains of the deep and opening the skies. When the waters finally receded, the Ark settled on dry land. Noah stepped out, offered sacrifices, and God established a covenant, placing a rainbow in the sky as a guarantee that He would never destroy the entire earth by a flood again.

Yet, even after a total restart, human nature remained flawed. Noah's descendants multiplied, migrated east, and eventually gathered in a plain to build a massive tower—the Tower of Babel. It was an act of raw human pride, an attempt to build a monument to their own greatness and establish a global empire independent of God.

To stop this unified rebellion, God instantly confused their single language into dozens of different tongues. Unable to communicate or work together, the people abandoned the project and scattered across the face of the earth, forming the distinct nations and language groups of ancient history.

The Rescue Plan Begins

With humanity scattered and divided into pagan nations, God launched His precise, long-term rescue operation. He did not choose a mighty empire like Egypt or Babylon. Instead, He went to a pagan land and called one ordinary, elderly man named Abram (later renamed Abraham).

God made a massive, multi-part unconditional promise to Abraham:

1. He would make him into a great, distinct nation.

2. He would give his descendants a specific piece of geography (the land of Canaan).
3. Through his specific family line, all the nations of the earth would ultimately be blessed.

The Quick Explanation: That third promise is the anchor of the entire Bible. God was telling Abraham that the serpent-crusher promised in the garden would officially come through his family tree.

Abraham trusted God, packed up his entire life, and moved to the land of Canaan. But there was a massive obstacle: Abraham was an old man, his wife Sarah was barren, and they had zero children. Decades passed, and it looked physically impossible for the promise to survive.

Yet, against all biological odds, when Abraham was 100 years old and Sarah was 90, she gave birth to a son named Isaac. The line of the promise was secure.

The torch then passed from Isaac to his son Jacob. Jacob was a flawed man, a master manipulator who spent the first half of his life scheming and deceiving his family. But after a literal, divine wrestling match with God, his character was transformed. God changed his name from Jacob (which meant “Deceiver”) to Israel (which means “Struggles with God”).

Israel had twelve sons, and these twelve men became the patriarchs of the twelve distinct tribes that made up the nation of Israel.

The Stage is Set in Egypt

The final chapters of Genesis focus heavily on one of Israel’s youngest sons, Joseph. Joseph was his father’s favorite, which drove his older brothers into a fit of jealous rage. They attacked Joseph, threw him into a pit, and sold him into slavery to a caravan traveling to Egypt, telling their father he had been torn apart by wild animals.

Through a series of intense trials, false accusations, and years spent forgotten in an Egyptian dungeon, Joseph remained fiercely loyal to God. Because God granted him the miraculous ability to interpret Pharaoh’s prophetic dreams, Joseph correctly predicted a massive, seven-year global famine. Pharaoh was so impressed by Joseph’s wisdom that he promoted him on the spot, making him the Prime Minister of Egypt—second in power only to Pharaoh himself.

Joseph used his authority to store up massive amounts of grain during the years of plenty. When the brutal famine hit the entire region, nations from all over the world had to travel to Egypt just to buy food to survive.

Back in Canaan, Abraham's family was starving. Israel sent his sons down to Egypt to buy grain. When they arrived, they bowed down before the Prime Minister, completely failing to recognize the little brother they had sold into slavery decades earlier.

Instead of executing revenge, Joseph revealed his identity, forgave them completely, and uttered one of the most profound summaries of God's sovereignty in history: "You intended to harm me, but God intended it for good, to accomplish what is now being done, the saving of many lives."

Joseph invited his father and his entire extended family to move down to Egypt to live in the fertile land of Goshen, where they could survive the famine under his protection.

Genesis closes with the entire family of Israel securely settled inside the borders of Egypt. They are safe, they are multiplying rapidly, and they are well-fed. But they are living in a foreign empire. The curtain drops, a generation passes away, and the stage is set for the political trap to snap shut—setting up the greatest rescue mission in ancient history.