

The One Process That Gives Cold Cases a Second Chance

Two Problems. One Comprehensive Solution.

Every Cold Case Creates Two Realities

For investigators,

it becomes a case that has reached a standstill. Traditional investigative avenues have been exhausted, leads have slowed or disappeared, and despite years of dedicated work, critical questions remain unanswered.

For families,

the case never stops. Every day without answers brings renewed uncertainty, unanswered questions, and the hope that someone, somewhere, may uncover the information needed to move the investigation forward.

A Full Case Review was developed to address both realities.

By working alongside law enforcement through a structured investigative methodology, my goal is to provide additional investigative direction while offering families the opportunity for understanding, hope, and, when possible, healing.

What Is a Full Case Review?

When people first hear that I'm a Psychic Profiler & Medium, they often imagine a single reading.

That's not what I do.

My Full Case Review is a structured investigative process developed to work alongside law enforcement. Throughout every phase of the review, I remain connected to my intuitive senses while examining the evidence, walking the crime scene, meeting with the victim's family, and collaborating with investigators.

Rather than relying on one moment of intuition, I gather information throughout the entire investigative process. Every impression is documented and preserved so investigators can independently evaluate the information within the context of their case.

Every case is approached with professionalism, respect, and the understanding that my role is not to replace traditional investigative methods but to contribute additional investigative information that may assist the investigation.

Phase One: Crime Scene, Environmental & Evidence Review

Phase One begins with a comprehensive review of the case. I examine investigative material, photographs, reports, and available evidence while remaining connected to my intuitive senses. Whenever possible, I conduct an environmental or location reading at the crime scene. For missing person investigations, this takes place at the individual's last known location. Being physically present allows me to receive impressions from the environment that cannot be obtained from reports or photographs alone. Through psychometry—receiving intuitive impressions by touching physical objects—I work with available evidence and personal belongings connected to the victim. Throughout this phase, I receive specific details, impressions, locations, timelines, behaviors, and investigative information that form the foundation of the case. Recurring patterns and themes emerge, providing direction for the remaining phases.

Phase Two: Family Connection

Phase Two is a dedicated reading that serves two purposes: to support the investigation and provide comfort to the family. Family meetings are coordinated in advance with the lead investigator. During this reading, I remain connected to my intuitive senses while meeting with family members and learning more about the victim. If the victim comes through from a mediumship perspective—a direct communication with the deceased—the information often contains specific details I could not have known beforehand. These details are validated by the family, providing comfort and healing while also contributing meaningful information to the investigation. If a mediumship connection does not occur, a psychic connection develops through the case itself. The information received can include, but is not limited to: physical descriptions of a possible suspect, approximate age, names or initials, vehicles including makes, models, and colors, personality traits and behaviors, motives or intentions, significant locations, relationships and connections to the victim, other specific details that contribute to the investigative picture.

Phase Three: Case Development & Guided Investigative Questioning

By this stage, the information gathered has developed into a more complete picture of the case. I identify recurring themes, timelines, locations, behaviors, relationships, and investigative patterns. Using the information from the first two phases, I work alongside investigators to determine where our focus should be and who should be spoken to. I conduct Guided Investigative Questioning with individuals identified by investigators—persons of interest, possible suspects, witnesses, or anyone connected to the victim. Rather than following a predetermined list of questions, my questioning is guided by the information I am receiving in real time. This intuitive approach helps investigators identify inconsistencies, uncover additional information, recognize behavioral patterns, and develop fresh investigative direction. Every Full Case Review must be documented as it unfolds with audio or video recording to preserve the integrity of the information and provide a complete record for independent evaluation.

One Process. Two Outcomes

Helping Move the Investigation Forward

Through this structured methodology, my goal is to provide investigators with specific information, investigative direction, and additional perspectives that may generate new leads, identify overlooked connections, or assist in moving an investigation forward.

Helping Bring Families Hope

When families choose to participate, the Full Case Review also creates an opportunity for healing, understanding, and hope. Whether through validated mediumship communication or the reassurance that every reasonable avenue has been explored, my goal is to support families with professionalism, compassion, and respect.

Is a Full Case Review Right for Your Case?

A Full Case Review may be appropriate when:

- An investigation has gone cold.
- Traditional investigative avenues have been exhausted.
- An unresolved homicide, suspicious death, or missing person investigation requires a fresh perspective.
- New investigative leads have stopped developing.
- Law enforcement is seeking additional investigative direction.
- Families continue searching for answers.

Professional Standards

Every Full Case Review is conducted with professionalism, confidentiality, and respect for both the investigative process and the families involved. As a Psychic Profiler & Medium, my role is not to replace traditional investigative methods but to contribute additional investigative information through a structured methodology designed to work alongside law enforcement. Every impression I receive is treated as investigative information—not investigative conclusion. Every detail is documented, preserved, and provided to investigators for independent evaluation within the context of their case. The investigative team remains solely responsible for evaluating information, determining its relevance, and deciding how it may assist the investigation. My commitment is to provide information with integrity, professionalism, and respect while supporting investigators in their pursuit of answers.

Next Steps

If your agency is investigating an unresolved homicide, suspicious death, or missing person case and would like to learn more about the Full Case Review Methodology, I welcome the opportunity to discuss how I may be able to assist your investigative team.
