PORTFOLIO UPDATE

October 2026 was marked by renewed market volatility, with US Treasury yields declining by around 30bps, Brent crude reaching US$117/bbl, and the Nasdaq 100 correcting nearly 10% from its peak amid concerns over rising AI-related funding requirements and earnings visibility. The Fed held rates at 3.75%–4.00%, with markets already pricing in three further rate hikes.

Headline CPI increased to 3.7% YoY with core CPI at 2.6%, largely reflecting higher energy prices. However, wage growth moderated to 3.0%, unemployment edged up to 4.2%, and job creation averaged just 51,000 per month over the past three months.

Long-end yields remain vulnerable to fiscal and supply pressures, particularly from elevated US government borrowing and growing AI-related debt issuance. This reinforces our preference for short-duration bonds, offering attractive carry with lower interest-rate sensitivity and greater reinvestment flexibility.

Against this backdrop, the Fund's NAV declined by 1.50% during the month, bringing its year-to-date return to 0.81%. Geographically, German, American and French credits were the main detractors, partially offset by British and Australian credits. By sector, Financial, Consumer Cyclical and Communications detracted from performance. With a leveraged portfolio YTM of around 10.77%, ongoing income, regular maturities and pull-to-par help cushion temporary mark-to-market volatility while supporting future returns.
