

Lewis specialises in residential development projects ranging from small backland and infill schemes to strategic land promotions and urban extensions. He advises landowners, developers and housebuilders through planning applications and has experience on a range of appeal types, including public inquiry.

BA Geography – University of Southampton

MA Urban and Regional Planning – University of Westminster

Member of the Royal Town Planning Institute

After completing his Masters in Urban and Regional Planning at the University of Westminster, Lewis joined Planning Potential's residential team in 2021 and gained Chartership in 2023. Having a keen interest in housing and urban regeneration, he has gained experience on large residential and mixed-use schemes, such as the Tonbridge gasholders site (144 residential units) and the Newhaven Marina (400 residential units). He has also gained experience in delivering medium sized residential developments, such as the Greenhill Allotments for 9 houses in Sutton. Lewis has also further diversified his experience by working on projects in the private residential sector, and in non-residential developments, including holiday lodges and sustainable energy developments.

At Planning Potential, Lewis has also undertaken site appraisals, prepared and submitted a wide range of planning applications and pre-applications, and has co-ordinated the discharge of planning conditions post-decision.

Outside of the office Lewis enjoys attending Chelsea games, whilst also playing 5-a side football weekly.
