

With a passion for understanding the history and context of places, Matt helps clients navigate heritage considerations through research, analysis and practical advice.

BA History (first class) from Homerton College, Cambridge

MPhil Early Modern History from Selwyn College, Cambridge

Matt is a Heritage Advisor with a particular interest in setting, views and the often complex relationships between heritage assets and their wider surroundings. He enjoys uncovering the historical details that can provide valuable context and insight to a project, combining thorough research with a practical and considered approach to heritage management.

With a keen eye for how historic places have evolved and how they interact with their surroundings, Matt brings together detailed research, careful analysis and practical thinking to help clients understand and navigate heritage considerations. He is particularly interested in finding the right sources and information to build a clear picture of a place and how its heritage significance can inform its future.

Matt is currently pursuing an MA in Conservation of Historic Buildings at York. When he's not at work or at university, he enjoys filling sketchbooks with buildings and architectural details, writing, and roaming the North Yorkshire countryside.
